Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Character of Abraham Lincoln: President of the United States Though he has filled several important political offices, and has mingled much with public men, he has never been a politician, in the popular sense. of that term. Low party management, appeals to the passions and prejudices of men, and those sly and artful intrigues, by which many have sought to elevate themselves, have had no charms for him. He has, uniformly, pursued an open and straight-forward course, and the public honors he has received have been bestowed upon him by an intelligent people, from a conviction of the honesty of his purpose and the purity of his character. In point of intellect, Mr. Lincoln stands high among our public men. Though deprived, by circumstances, of the advantages of an early education, he, like others in that situation, became a student of human nature, and learned from real life what others have learned from books; and his clear perception, and strong, practical common sense, have been found a good substitute for learned lore; and the incidents of a frontier life furnish him with as apt illustrations as the ripest scholar can draw from the classics; and though they may not have the polish of the gems gleaned from the lumber of Greek and Roman Literature, they are more life-like, and, hence, make a deeper impression upon the mass of the people. His intellect is of the true Western type. Strengthened by hardships, trained by close observation, and sharpened by contact with kindred spirits, his powers have been well developed, so that he has ever been found adequate to any emergency; and, by steady perseverance and a...
