Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Experiments in Educability Several years ago there appeared in Nature an account of a statistical inquiry into sex determination. The results indicated that children born to young mothers were predominantly girls and that those born to old mothers were predominantly boys. Whether this hypothesis has been borne out by further results I do not know, but assuming it to be a law, it is an example of what has been called regulation in behavior. The purpose which such a process serves is clear. When there is a shortage of women in a community girls are likely to marry when very young, due to the increased opportunity afforded them on account of the under-supply of more mature women. If such marriages result in a number of female infants greater than the normal expectation, the balance between supply and demand is thereby reestablished. A similar compensation is had when, in a society where females predominate, and hence are not married so early in life, male offspring are in excess. The world is full of instances of this sort. Organisms utilize the very difficulties they encounter in order to bring about the removal of these difficulties. Their make-up insures this regulation. They do not depend on outside guidance to carry them through adverse situations. The adverse situations in combination with an organism are self-eliminating. Of course this is not always true for the individual, but the social group, which is the larger organism, survives because the procreation of its parts is as rapid as their destruction. We often so construct a piece of machinery that this principle of auto-adjustment holds in its behavior. This is done so that...
