PREFATORY NOTE An attempt is made in this paper to set forth the attitude of the several states as regards the encouragement of secondary education through the granting of special subsidies to the middle schools. As this inquiry covers the period from the establishment of the earliest secondary schools in this country down to the present time, it is made to deal more particularly with systems of state aid rather than with a consideration of aid granted to individual institutions. No account has been taken of the aid granted to state normal schools, which are, in theory, professional schools, but very often are, in reality, schools devoting a large part of their time to secondary instruction. Preparatory departments such as state universities maintained during the earlier years of their existence, are likewise omitted from this consideration. For a definition of the term secondary education, the...
