Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.From the Preface: These folk stories have been told to me by natives of the various countries to which they relate in the Ikom district of Southern Nigeria. In all cases they have had to be translated by an interpreter, and frequently it has been found necessary to employ two. Some of the stories are very old and have been handed down from one generation to another, but it is most difficult, almost impossible, to judge with any degree of accuracy how old they really are. The word dowry comes frequently into these tales, and is used as meaning the amount paid to the parents of the girl by the husband. In the introduction to my Folk Stories from Southern Nigeria, published in 1910, Mr. Andrew Lang suggests that the term bride-price would better express the institution, and, no doubt, he is perfectly right. I have, however, adhered to the old expression of dowry as it is in general use, and is so well known on the Coast. When a man is asked how much dowry he paid for his wife, he will frequently produce his bush book, consisting of bundles of small sticks tied round with tie-tie, one bundle for each year. He will then take one stick from a bundle, and holding it up will say: That is two calabashes of tombo I gave to the father. He will then place the stick on the ground and take another, saying This is one fathom of cloth I gave to the girl. The next stick may represent twenty yams given to the mother, and the following sticks may mean twenty-five rods, a silk handkerchief, a bar of...
