Not illustrated. 1911 Excerpt: . economics has to give courses in political science, sociology, and other subjects, but I will assume in this discussion that he is so fortunate as to be able to give his whole time to economics and that he has an assistant to read papers. I will also assume that he is not expected to do more than twelve hours a week of work in class, although I am well aware that many teachers have fifteen, eighteen, and even twenty hours of class work, and are expected to serve on committees, to give public lectures, to write books, to engage in social reform, and, in general, to be useful citizens at home and abroad. It seems to be the general opinion among teachers of economics that the elementary course should be given in the Sophomore year, although many Freshmen are well able to do the work....
